PHOTOGRAPHIC EXHIBITION

Frank Little

18 September - 21 November 2009

Opening: Thursday 17 September at 6:30pm

Frank Little brings to his photography literary, artistic and philosophical influences. In Ulysses one of James Joyce characters, Stephen Dedalus, walks 'into infinity along Sandymount strand' and the world where Beckett places his protagonists is also the location for many of his photographs.

René Magritte spoke of his pictures as being solutions to certain problems of visual thinking. The images here try to posit the question of what perception actually is. We perceive and interact with the world through our senses and learned social behaviours. Modern Western thought was founded on Descartes' dictum "I think therefore I am" but we are not just pure intellect. The physical world and how we interact with it are of intrinsic importance to what we are.
